

World Malaria Day. A day we'd all like to eradicate.

Every 30 seconds malaria kills an African child. In just one year, malaria takes more than one million lives in Africa, the world's most afflicted region, and leaves poverty and devastation in its wake. Babies and young children are particularly susceptible. World Malaria Day—April 25—provides an opportunity to increase awareness and resources to combat this terrible but preventable and treatable disease.

ExxonMobil is committed to this fight. We're on the front lines, supporting new drug development and helping distribute insecticide-treated nets to places where they are desperately needed. Many companies and nations have already joined in this effort. It's essential we all work together. Present and future generations are counting on us.

To learn more about our efforts against malaria, visit exxonmobil.com/malaria.

And for what others in the global community are doing, visit rollbackmalaria.org.

Brands of ExxonMobil

ExxonMobil

Taking on the world's toughest energy challenges.™